If you didn't know what mania was, this would be a good place to start. That, or this is someone trying to be so intellectual that he can't think straight.

It's all good, if you believe that everyone uses their imagination to benefit other people or to empower their best natures, not their worst.

It is more a collection of fast moving video effects. Content is minimum. In their minds, the creators of the film seem to have very little room for social considerations. They confuse techno-blah-blah with a credible way to speak for society.

Many people, mostly without realizing it, have given technology the place that should have been reserved for their social and political opinions. The fact that they don't realize it, doesn't make this confusion go away.
